10/4/72 Howard, during a short interruption this hasty note on what I omitted from yesterday's brief note on Joseten's quotation of a letter I think might have been from Sylvia. That letter began, as quoted, with commendation to this incredibly irresponsible not who has done so much harm and absolutely no good for his perseverance. Could that not be applied with equal validity and integrity to Garrison, who has just gone to the Supreme Court in a bad context and with an inadequate case, in addition to the other sins attributed to him? The story also praises Graham and the New York Times, source cited but masked, for his/their part in getting Marshall to permit access to Wecht. As I thought of this, it suddenly came to me that if Sylvia was genuine in her reasons for wanting my work pilfered, so that it would appear, in whatever minor and significantless form, how then explain her sitting on whatever the world-shaking thing from Lifton?
